Reschid Pasha.

Among the great men of the day must be reckoned Reschid Pasha, the present Turkish Minister of Foreign Affairs. He is evidently a man of fine natural capacity and of superior attainments. He has studied with much attention the arts and sciences, and the opinions and customs of the nations of the west, and he speaks the French language with fluency. Among his people he is emineutly a reformer and man of progress. Though a strict observer of the precepts of the Koran, he abjures polyg-amy, and has but one wife. In his efforts to reform old abuses, and to introduce the principles of a higher civilization among his country-men, he has encountered the most strenuous opposition from a portion of the Musselmen. Although sometimes compelled to succumb to the machinations of his enemies, his efforts at reform have not been without their results. We have recently been told, on high authority, that no nation has made more rapid progress during the past few years than the Ottoman nation. Much of this advancement is due to the intelligence and energetic exertions of Reschid Pasha. Reschid Pasha was born at Constantinople in 1802, of a family of distinction, and is consequently now fifty-one years of age. His father was administrator-general of the Imperial Mosque at Bajazet. His mother, being left a widow with two sons and two daughters, de voted herself to the education of Reschid, the elder of the sons. Different from the generality of Turkish officials, even of the highest rank, Reschid was qualified by his studies and edu-cation to fill the most important offices of State before he was called to them. After completing his education, he became private secretary to the celebrated Ali Pasha, who was successively Grand Vizier, commander of the expedition against the Greeks, and governor of the Morea.

It was by this famous personage that Reschid was inducted into the arts of war and government. But Ali Pasha having fallen into disgrace, in consequence of his military opera-tions, Reschid (then Bey) became the secretary of the old and distinguished Pertew Pasha, then Minister of Foreign Affairs. This happened between 1827 and 1834, the period during which the well-meaning, but impolitic Sultan Mahmoud, after having destroyed the formidable Janissaries, was struggling to introduce some reforms into his empire. Without much intelligence, and with a very imperfect idea of European civilization, this Sultan fancied that he could change the character of his people by changing their costumes-that he could alter the face of his empire by arbitrary degrees and by the use of force.

age nor the influence to be heard in the councils of the Porte, but the passing events seemed to have been observed and studied with the and when the Sultan recovered from his drunken fit, he had no recollection of the order to bitter tears on account of the execution of Pertew Pasha, the result of his own folly. Resself become Grand Vizier: His administration public utility, charged with the duty of pre paring plans of administration. His laudable up against him many enemies, and the great enpacity he displayed especially excited the away under him, anticipated his fall by returning to the west in the capacity of ambassador. Upon the death of Mahmoud in 1839, Respay his respects to Mahmoud's successor, the youthful Abdul Mederd, the present Sultan of the Ottoman empire. He was kindly received. During his residence in England and France Reschid had conceived the idea of forming a sort of constitution for the Ottoman empire, with the object of establishing a regular government, and he now found in the young sovereign a favorable listener to his scheme. The result was the composition of the famous hatti cherif or imperial decree of Gul-Hane, which was promulgated with great pomp and solem-nity on the 3d of November, 1839, in a vast plain near the seraglio, amid all the assembled dignitaries of the empire and the ambassadors and representatives of foreign courts. This hatti cherif provides: First, security to the subjects of the empire for their life, honor and property. Second, a regular mode of taxation. Third, a uniform mode of enlisting soldiers and a regular term of service. Fourth, publicity in debates and in judicial trials. These privi-leges extend to all subjects of whatever religion.

Reschid Pasha addressed himself with resolation and intelligence to carry into effect the principles of the hatti cherif. He altered the system of public taxes, organized municipal councils without distinction of religion or race, composed a penal code, &c.; and he punished the highest personages when they violated the law. But Reschid was contending against an inveterate system of abuses, and moreover had to encounter the fanaticism of the ignorant Turks. The secret machinations of Russia were also perpetually leveled against him. The consequence was that Reschid was deposed in March, 1841. He again returned to Paris, and while fulfilling with ability the duties of ambassador in the west, he prosecuted, with unremitting diligence, his investigations into western civilization. The great aim of his diplomacy was to encourage the alliance of fat in summer, and can easily keep it so till ing his country against the encroaching ambi-tion of Nicholas. Reschid is most decidedly anti-Russian in heart and mind, and his ap-pointment by Abdul Mederd to the post of opposition, on the part of the Sultan, to the cabinet of St. Petersburg. Resentid Pasha is, beyond comparison, the ablest diplomatist and statesman in the Ottoman dominions. We

tle. His manners are simple; he usually wears that power.

At this time Reschild possessed neither the closest attention by him. In 1834 he was sent as ambassador in the west, and spent several years in London and Paris in that capacity. This mission exercised an important influence in developing the character and views of Reschid-Pasha. He studied attentively every phase of western civilization-the laws, manners and customs, and omitted the examination of nothing that could be of service in instructing his mind upon these subjects. Whilst thus employed, his friend Pertew Pasha having become stan, supposing a juncture ever to be effected Grand Vizier, Reschid was called from the west to assume the duties of Minister of Foreign Affairs. Before, however, he reached Constantinople, he learned that his benefactor had been deposed, exiled and strangled by order of part of the troops now employed in observation chid took advantage of the disposition of his sovereign to procure the expulsion from court of the enemies of his late benefactor, and himwas marked by some judicious reforms. He instituted the two Councils of State, for the purpose of giving greater regularity to the action government. He also created a council of efforts, however, to benefit his country, raised fear and the consequent animosity of Russia. Reschid feeling that the ground was giving chid repaired immediately to Constantinople to England and France for the purpose of shielddinister of Foreign Affairs, which he now holds, must be construed as an emphatic act of

The Circassians. A correspondent of the London Times writes f the Circassians and their country as follows: of the Circassians and their country as follows:
Much ignorance prevails throughout Europe with regard to the Circassian, or rather Daghestan war. Even its locality is commonly disregarded, and Circassia, bordering on the Black Sea, is represented as the theatre of war.
In truth, few or no outbreaks, or rather inroads, occur in that district. Both the mountains and inaccessible routions against memb-tains and inaccessible portions remain unsub-dued, and Russia, for some years past, has virtually contented herself with confining their inhabitants within a strict cordon. The line of coast is in Russian possession, as also a belt of territory separating it from Turkey, while on the east it is separated from the actual seat of war, Daghestan, by 150 miles of a difficult country, in absolute occupation by the Rus-sians, and moreover, absolutely subjected to Daghestan is similarly encircled by Russian territory, and is even separated in a similar manner from the Caspian sea. Nevertheless. it has hitherto striven earnestly, but vainly, to emancipate itself from this state of isolated oundage. Its efforts have been chiefly directed to the surprise of outlying posts and forts, varied by sudden forays and inroads upon the adjacent Russian territory. These forays are often successful, as far as booty is concerned, but can never affect or disturb the virtual possession of their present position by the Russians; although, on the other hand, they necessitate an immense force, distributed over the whole line of frontier, to repress them. With a portion of this force the Russians annually attack Schamill and the other Beys in their strongholds, and invariably with the same apparent ill-success. Protected by the impenetrable nature of the country, the mountaineers permit the Russian troops to penetrate into defiles, where discipline and order are unavailing, and whence they are compelled to retreat with loss and discomfiture. Incapable as the Daghestans are of resisting the Russian troops on an ordinary field of bat-tle, once in their own defiles, they assert an evident superiority. Hence Russia gains apparently nothing by these attacks, though perhaps her end is served by the efficiency acquired in actual warfare by her troops. These troops, and those in the adjoining country under the same command, were stated by Prince Woronzow, in conversation with an English officer who lately visited his camp and Tiflis, as numbering 300,000 men. Allowing for the exaggeration natural to a loose conversational esti-mate, we may probably safely conjecture them to number 250,000.

It will thus be seen that the Turkish forces now collected at Ardahan and Kara, will find but inefficient allies in the warriors of Daghebetween them, in despite of the one hundred and fifty miles and the Russian forces which divide them. Russia can afford to withdraw the greatest the Sultan. The sentence of death had been of Daghestan, at the trivial cost of a few raids obtained from Mahmoud while intoxicated, and incursions, followed by no danger of a serious diversion, a sacrifice which would fall far more heavily on the helpless villages than on which he had affixed his signature, and wept the Russian government. Disorders and partial insurrections, too, might, and doubtless would, arise in Georgia, which might swell the Turkish ranks by the addition of a few thousand raw irregulars, but which might well be disregarded by the Russian general, until a de cisive battle gave him time to redress them.

> THE KOSZTA CASE. Baron de Bruck, alhough he did not in terms make Koszta's release conditional, took occasion, in his letter of consent, to re-assert the right of Austria to seize him if he should return to Turkey; and Mr. Marsh, in his reply, does not deny the right asserted, nor, indeed, allude to it in any way. These letters are dated respectively the 14th and 15th of September, at which date there was, therefore, no obstacle, so far as the Austrian and American ministers were concerned, to the immediate departure of Koszta for the United States. It appears, however, from a letter in the Evening Post, dated at Constantinople, Oct. 2, that Mr. Offley, the American consul at Smyrna, did protest against Koszta's release on any such conditions; and refused to demand it of the French consul upon such terms; that Koszta himself took the same view of the case. and refused to be liberated on these conditions; and that, at the date specified, he still remained in prison. The following is an extract from the Post's letter: Though this arrangement [between Baron de Bruck and M. Marsh] appears liberal on the part of Austria, and honorable to the United States, it is said here that the consul of the United States at Smyrna has refused to demand Koszta's release from the French hospital in which he is closely confined and strictly guarded, on the ground that the Austrian govern-ment should not be allowed to state in it any reservation of "rights," and be required to admit the illegality of his arrest. The consul requires that Koszta shall be, now, abandoned Austria, and acknowledged by her as being an American citizen. Until then, he refuses to claim him of the French consul, and refuses to obey the instructions of the American minister on the subject of his arrangement of Koszta's immediate release, while his nationality is under discussion by the two governments. It is also said that he has put up Koszta to protest against the American minister, and to refuse to leave his prison and be restored to free-dom in the United States.—N. Y. Daily Times.
